Making a Difference

A group of 13 AirUCI faculty, with other AirUCI researchers, is working on an unusual project. Called Beyond the Tailpipe, this team is examining microscopic tire, brake, and road particles that contribute to air pollution and are linked to multiple health issues—on top of the tailpipe emissions we've been studying for years.

Latest Research

In the depth of winter, Manabu Shiraiwa sent a team from his research group to conduct field studies in Alaska. From January to March, two grad students and a postdoc were part of a larger team that spent several weeks measuring indoor and outdoor air pollution in the Fairbanks area, known for its bad air quality.

Spotlight on Faculty

Andrea de Vizcaya Ruiz joined our AirUCI faculty in January 2022 as a professor of Environmental and Occupational Health in UCI's School of Medicine. With noted expertise in toxicology, she is an excellent fit into ongoing AirUCI studies and had already formed collaborative projects with AirUCI's Health Sciences faculty prior to her appointment at UCI.
